BRUIN'S LOST BREAKFAST -OJ one occasion I had a capital opportunity of observing the movements of a bear while engaged in an attempt to procure himself a meal. Bun was Smoking and Chewing Tobacco, from us, stealthily advancing toward a seal first seen on the ice, about a shousand yards that was lying apparently asleep about five bundred yards off. Wishi g to observe his morious, we made the boat fest to the co and concealed ourselves at the bottom. The best erept u. cau lously toward his would be proyectcasionally breaking through the thin, rotten c and swiming for some distance sometimes altogether under water. Having approached to wi his about twenty or tair: y pards of his victim, he made a rapid, headlong resh toward ir, but only to meet with disappointment, for quick as had been his motions, those of the seal were more rapid still, and he vanished down his blow-hole before his aggressor had covered half the dis ance that separated them when he made his final oberge. The bear, however, followed into the water, where he remained diving and searching about for some time before he emerged, scapping his itws viciously, evedently much coraged at his failure, and behav ing sitegether in a very savage manner. A this juncture the harpoon r who was with me imitated the cry of a walcus, and with such suc c se se to entirely declive the bear, who, pricking up tis ears, quckly advace d toward us but only to meet his death from a bullet out of my rifle. - Captain Markham,
